

Political Risk > Political Opportunity

---

Congress is full of policy stalemates between Republicans and Democrats (and sometimes between the House and Senate). The ongoing shutdown is one example, but there are many, and they emerge fairly often. Understanding when a stalemate will end is understanding a simple formula:

When political risk is greater than political opportunity, a stalemate will generally end.