#1 AMERICA REMEMBERS 9/11

The 25th anniversary of the September 11th terrorist attacks brought a variety of ceremonies across the country. President Trump declared the anniversary Patriot Day and ordered flags to be flown at half-mast. He also delivered remarks at the Pentagon. Additionally, NYC Mayor Zohran Mamdani's administration released documents this week about the air quality around Ground Zero, which has resulted in 9/11 related illnesses for those working in response to the terrorist attacks.

“ This morning, we also remember how America responded to that wickedness. On days like 9/11, we learn what a country is truly made of. ”

- President Trump

#2 REPUBLICANS HOST MIDTERM CONVENTION

Dallas has been home to a Republican “convention” to showcase Republican candidates and highlight the President's agenda headed into the 2026 election. One policy promised by the President was to provide all American adults with $5,000 if Republicans win the election in November. The proposal immediately faced pushback, including from some Republicans.

“ Pretend I'm on the ballot. ”

#3 CONGRESS RETURNS FOR A BRIEF MOMENT

The House of Representatives will be back in session next week, but will return to the campaign trail immediately after for the remainder of the campaign season. While some sizable legislative initiatives are expected (WRDA & the Russian Sanctions Bill), most of the legislative business will focus on non-controversial suspension bills. Committees will be using the last week to squeeze in final committee hearings and markups as well.
